

I believe that one of the greatest privacy rights a family has is to be able to choose who can bother them at home whether it be to your door solicitors or telemarketers. You can put a sign up to keep away door to door solicitors but the only way to keep away telemarketers is for a system that "puts up a sign" for you. I believe that the system we have in Indiana does exactly that. It has now been told that the FCC plans to establish policies that will undercut or water down the state's policies. I believe that the only benefit to this will be to the harassing telemarketers and of no benefit to the public. I would favor national policies that would provide more consumer privacy rights and only trump a state policy if the state policy is less strict. Thank you
